Little England Daffodil Farm

Bena, Virginia

THE COVER PICTURE

Little England plantation was established in 1651 through a grant of the British Crown. The clapboard house in the right of the picture was built prior to 1680, and the main house with its thick brick walls laid in Flemish bond was completed in 1716.

Twice it served as an Army hospital—during the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812—and in 1781 the Virginia Militia used it as an outpost to observe the operations of the British Army at Yorktown and Gloucester Point just prior to the surrender by Cornwallis to General Washington in October of that year.

Tastefully and authentically restored by the present owners and occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Pratt, formerly of Glen Cove, Long Island, the old buildings present a true picture of typical Virginia manor houses of two and one-half centuries ago.

The extensive new wing at the left of the picture was completed in 1955. Architectural details of the original building were so painstakingly followed that the entire ensemble has the appearance of having been built from a single set of plans.

OUR NEW POLICY

Little England's primary goal is and will always be to produce daffodil bulbs of the finest quality.

Daffodil growers from all parts of the United States and Canada have demonstrated their appreciation by responding with so many orders that, in the Fall of 1957, shipping became an almost impossible task.

Thus, we have reluctantly discontinued many hundreds of varieties and will limit our future efforts to the culture of only the better types of each classification.

By "better" types we do not necessarily mean the most expensive ones, but rather those of fine color, form and substance which flourish and reproduce well in the eastern United States, and will give a good account of themselves on the show bench.

About 100 varieties described in the catalog do not appear in the price list. We have them under cultivation at Little England but will offer for sale only those which establish themselves here as well as they have done under their native growing conditions.

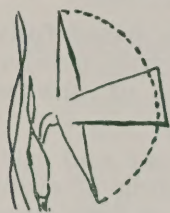

Our growing conditions are similar to those in Ireland and Holland, the bulb fields being bordered on three sides by salt water from which moist breezes supply an element which seems to produce larger, healthier bulbs. Every scientific care and precaution is taken in growing and shipping.

IN THE CATALOG

On the facing page you will find the revised system for the classification of daffodils which is of interest to those who exhibit in shows. Alphabetical listing of varieties begins on Page 4. Letters and numbers appearing in front of names indicate the correct classification and an asterisk (*) means "outstanding flower." The number printed immediately after the name of the flower signifies the approximate blooming time. The blooming season has been divided into six periods, number 1 indicating the earliest bloomers and number 6 the latest.

1958 Bulb Prices

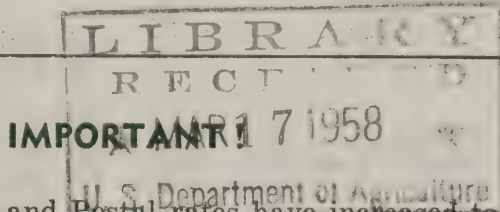

In keeping with our new policy of concentrating our efforts on the culture of only the newer and finer varieties of daffodils, our current price list is restricted to about 200 varieties.

This compares with more than 800 listings made in previous years, yet includes those flowers which, in the opinion of key members of the American Daffodil Society and many garden clubs of the eastern United States, are the very best varieties of their type.

This list does not, of course, include all of the varieties in cultivation at Little England. Many of the newer imports will not be offered until we have determined whether they will establish themselves in this country as well as they have done under their native growing conditions—this being the reason that about 100 varieties described in the catalog do not appear in the price list.

Letters and numbers preceding names of flowers designate the classification to which each belongs. Asterisks (*) following names indicate outstanding flowers.

Little England bulbs are guaranteed to be of first quality and are warranted as to identity.

Packing costs and ~~Postal rates have increased to~~ such an extent that we reluctantly find it necessary to charge 50 cents on all shipments East of the Mississippi and $1.00 West of that point. Don't forget to include this charge with your order. Shipments which are too heavy or bulky to go by mail will be sent express collect.

Delivery subject to crop, and being unsold on receipt of order.

Please order early—not later than July 10 if possible. Some varieties are in short supply and orders are filled on a "first come, first served" basis. Orders received after October 15 cannot be filled, as it is imperative for us to begin planting surplus bulbs on that date. Orders received prior to October 15 for shipment at a later date are accepted since bulbs required are withheld from planting.
